In the SchemingMind Web server League, we have started four of our six matches this season and so far appear to be much too strong for Division 4. 24 games have been completed, all won except for 3 draws. The team for each match comprises 5 players and there are 6 matches during the year. If you are interested in joining the team please let me know, so that players need not play in every match.

Letter received from Geoff Lloyd

I find myself amazed after reading Peter Sanderson's remarks with regard to computer software. I have been buying 3 or 4 chess books each year for about 35 years. Before CD's would he like to know of all my books before embarking on a game against me? Progress means change and CC has never been played at a competitive level without at least MCO at the side of the board and so on and so on. I have now begun to buy Openings CD's instead of Openings books, it's no different however much more material is available. Whenever any of my grandchildren show an interest in a given subject, guess what? I buy them a CD or DVD to learn from, chess is no different than any other subject. Using a chess engine to generate moves is a different matter, perhaps this is what Peter Sanderson was really getting at.....Geoff Lloyd

Received from Geoff Rosser in his report

On the vexed subject of computer use I notice that the SchemingMind chess site specifically bans the use of chess engines, whilst allowing the use of databases, which are comparable with books on openings. I wonder how it is possible to enforce this, if members do not admit to it. Is it something which we should consider in internal competitions?.....Geoff Rosser
